Wilhelm Gossecs bric-à-brac shop stands close to the site of Munich's famous Oktoberfest. The event means good business for him, too, and in September he wheels out the Bavaria memorabilia for the foreign tourists. One evening he hears voices in front of his window and finds a drunk lying on the street, the victim of a robbery. Judging by the business card in his pocket, he appears to be a member of the state parliament. The only other thing he has left is an invitation from a listed company, Global Real Estate. Gossec investigates and soon finds himself caught up in a web of corruption and property speculation.
